

Dear Colleagues

Chest pain is not an uncommon presentation in medical profession. It is probably one of the most frightening experience by patients especially when it is in the acute state. However, the fact that not every chest pain is the result of coronary artery disease makes this symptom a challenge to medical profession. Obviously, the aim of the medical professionals at first instance is to rule out or establish its cardiac origin. Because of the complexity of the subject and its intense relation to general practice, we have now decided to organise a master class on chest pain and coronary heart disease.

We are glad that our invitation has been accepted by the various experts in the filed of chest pain and coronary heart disease from different institutions in London. We made the last session to be an interactive one to encourage you to discuss cases which you think appropriate for discussion.

Lastly the meeting should provide a very good venue to meet the speakers individually and discuss matters of interest.

We look forwards to seeing you in this exciting venture

Dr. Majeed Salmasi
Community Cardiologist (Brent tPCT)
Director, Brent tPCT Cardiology Training Programme