Symposium on Cardiovascular Disease in Women

Friday 7th July 2006

Royal College of Physicians, London

Cardiovascular Disease is killing more women than breast cancer.

Cardiovascular Disease is still considered a man's disease and there is little recognition of its importance in women.

Women with heart disease continue to be under investigated and under treated.

Better education and awareness are needed. This one day Symposium will help to highlight the challenges in identifying and managing heart disease in women.

Course Director

Dr Ghada Mikhail
Consultant Cardiologist
North West London Hospitals Trust
& St Mary's Hospital Trust

CPD

CPD accreditation has been applied for.

Key points covered will include:

- Coronary heart disease in women
- Symptoms and risk factor modification
- Non invasive investigations
- Medical, interventional and surgical treatment options
- Heart failure in women
- Heart disease in pregnancy
- Stroke in Women

Who should attend?

Cardiologists, GPs and other health care professionals with a special interest in cardiology

The Symposium is sponsored through educational grants from Boston Scientific, Cordis, Guidant and Lilly (The programme content is the responsibility of the organising physicians)
